My Salutations to all Pious Souls ...

The history of human progress is very old; humans have certainly been progressing continuously for thousands of years. And after progressing continuously, the human race that has developed is right in front of us – this progress has taken place at the physical level, mental level and social level. We do not have the knowledge of the ‘soul-level development’ which has taken place; it does not mean that development has not happened just because we are unaware of it. Nature develops, but it develops uniformly; and progressing non-stop, continuously, is nature’s innate temperament. Progress also takes place in society, and it also takes place in the Himalayas; the progress taking place in society is visible, but the progress taking place in the Himalayas is not visible. Nature, through the medium of ‘Shree Sant Gyaneshwar’ was making progress at the soul-level in society; at the very same time, the Gurus in the Himalayas were searching for new directions, new ways to progress at the soul-level. The Himalayan Gurus first studied the efforts being made in society for soul-level progress, before searching for a new path; and then, they came to know that all the paths were based on karma, on sermons – perform good karma, do not perform bad karma – this was the sermon/advice being given by everybody. And karma is actually related to the physical body; no one was talking about the soul, the soul's progress, of liberation /of moksha. They saw all these situations and they also saw that the advice / sermons were being rendered from outside, and the people too were receiving them externally. There was no internal change or 'soul-level progress' taking place in anybody at all; on seeing this situation, they felt that they should come out with one such path which would be at the inner level, and which did not have any external advice/sermon. It was necessary that some inner incident should happen, some inner change should take place in man.

The realised saints (siddhas) of the Himalayas continuously did research on this for 800 years, they performed various experiments, and then created a divine 'soul-level spiritual experience'; and in this ritual, prayer was of primary importance. Accepting the 'Guru' himself as 'Paramatma' personified was the continuous perception. By continuously having this perception, the Guru's soul which is resident inside the Guru's body, which has performed all the spiritual practice - the disciple's connection would happen directly with that itself (the Guru's soul), and whatever knowledge the Guru had, whatever spiritual state that the Guru had, that would get transformed gradually into the disciple. With the passage of time, the disciple himself would become his own 'Guru'. All this would also happen because by accepting the Guru as 'Paramatma', the search for Paramatma would come to an end and the disciple would obtain life's greatest satisfaction that he had attained 'Paramatma'; and with that, the disciple would directly attain 'self-realisation' and the soul would directly get awakened. Then, the disciple would start getting all the universal knowledge from his soul itself. Lots of different experiments were carried out about this soul-level spiritual experience, their results were also examined, and then later a collective decision was taken that this ‘spiritual experience’ should be conveyed up to each human being in the world. Now, the question was how to convey it – to convey it, it was necessary to have such a medium who was ordinary and would be able to reach up to the ordinary man. Then, they searched for and found a divine realised Mahatma who would take birth with this sole ‘objective’ itself, assume a physical body, and carry out this massive work. In this manner, this soul-level spiritual experience has managed to reach the world after 800 years of continuous spiritual practice. Several Gurus and Siddhas of the Himalayas have given their divine contribution for this grand work.

At the time when this work was going on in the Himalayas, at that time ‘Shree Sant Gyaneshwar’ was doing the work of awakening the masses through the medium of ‘Gyaneshwari’ (simplified Marathi version of the Bhagwat Gita), but there was a lack of spiritual experience in it. This was because the spiritual experience is a living process, and for that it is necessary that the time should be right, and also the human body needs to be suitable, which was not the case at that time. Hence, even though the knowledge existed, there was no other way out than to wait for the right time. The present time of the ‘present period’ is that suitable time period, when it is possible for the process of self-realisation to take place. Self-realisation is just the planting of the seed of ‘spiritual progress’; after obtaining this, nothing remains to be obtained in life from outside. It is necessary to know what ‘knowledge’ we have received after attaining ‘self-realisation’; and later, as the sadhak continues with his spiritual practice, his soul consciousness also increases simultaneously, and the body consciousness starts reducing. Whatever problems man has in life, are all related to the body itself; so, as the body consciousness reduces, the problems related to the body also start reducing.

By doing 'regular meditation practice', the sadhak's thoughts start reducing, and the time period of thoughts also decreases; and because of this, a good positive effect takes place on the sadhak's entire body. And along with this, he also starts getting an introversive state, because man attains a completely satisfied state. When a sadhak starts experiencing that he has attained Paramatma - 'the Paramatma that I had been searching for many years outside - I have met him right within my own self'; then, he starts experiencing complete satisfaction in life. And he experiences complete satisfaction in his life, and he also experiences that his entire life itself has become successful. We can get this feeling of complete satisfaction only by walking on the spiritual path. With the progress of science we can get facilities, we can get comfort, we can also save time, but this is not the aim of life. Every person has only one aim in life, and that is to obtain 'inner peace' and complete satisfaction in life; and both these are two sides of the same coin. If you have attained 'Paramatma' within yourself, then you will get 'complete satisfaction' in life. And on the other hand, one also gets inner peace. We keep searching all our life for Paramatma and inner peace outside, whereas the true state is that both these lie within us ourselves.

We get 'Paramatma' and 'inner peace' in life only when we attain a karma-free state. By karma-free state I am referring to that state in life in which we have endured all the karmas of our past birth; and along with that, we create such a good spiritual state by ‘Guru’s grace’, that the body consciousness of ‘I’ itself comes to an end. Then, bad karmas do not take place at all through our medium, because our soul itself has control over our body, and we accept that the good karmas that we perform have taken place by Guru’s grace, and surrender them to Paramatma – hence, we attain a ‘karma-free state’.

‘Karma-free state’ is called a ‘liberated state’ – this itself is called the state of moksha. Attaining this state does not mean death; death is getting free of the body, and liberated state means becoming free of body consciousness. When death comes to a sadhak, it will come; but the fear of death ends, because body consciousness itself ends. So, whether the body remains or not, one does not experience any difference in both the states. And after dying, one also becomes free from the circle of birth and death, because no karma remains to be endured for a sadhak in order to take a new birth. This is because every person takes birth to endure his karmas, and he makes ‘plans’ about which body he should assume through whose medium he will endure those karmas. And to take such a birth, he searches for a ‘family’, he ‘searches for parents’ - to such an extent, that he also determines the time and date of his birth. Even though today people try to fix the time and date of delivery with the help of doctors by doing a caesarean operation, the doctor is unable to carry out the delivery at this pre-determined time. It could be due to any reason; and the time at which the child wants to take birth, he definitely takes birth at that time itself. This happens because the atmosphere, the ‘energy’ that is required for the child’s birth is present only at a determined time.

This means that the soul which has to arrive takes birth only at the determined time, and it also definitely gives up its body at a determined time. That is why, those 'Saints-Mahatmas' who have transcended their body consciousness, they know the time and day on which they will give up their body. They 'give up their body' at that determined time and day itself. Generally, the time of 'giving up the body' is when the collective body consciousness is less and there is an atmosphere of soul consciousness. This is because during this time one's attachment to the body reduces, because the body consciousness has reduced, and one leaves the body easily. The time of the '45 days' of the 'Deep Meditation Practicum' is also such a time; during these 45 days, many holy and pure souls have also taken 'birth', and many saints-mahatmas have 'given up their body' too – this has indeed been my experience in the past '17 years'.

This is because the 'Deep Meditation Practicum' is such a time period in which those sadhaks who do not meditate regularly also meditate; and in these 45 days, the body consciousness reduces and soul consciousness increases. Holy and pure souls select such a time period itself, when the body consciousness is less and the soul consciousness is more. But during this time period, those people who commit 'suicide' do not come into this category, because suicide is committed at the peak of negative thoughts – here, one does not leave the body, it is given up forcefully.

Therefore, always remember that whether it is 'sinful karma' or bad karma – they are performed only in body consciousness, and we do not actively perform 'pious karma' – they just happen. Hence it is said, that donation made with one's 'I' sense is also not considered in the pious category. Now, during the Deep Meditation Practicum itself, the Mahakumbh is being organised on a grand scale at ‘Prayagraj’. At this time, it is important to bathe in the ‘Ganga River’. If you actually look at it in this way, then the Ganga River is not a big river, because there are bigger, longer rivers than the Ganga; dead bodies are also made to flow in it, even then it is pure because Siddhas-Mahatmas have sat and performed their penance on the banks of this river. The energy of a life-time of their penance has been made to flow in this river, and after that they have given up their body. It is the effect of that energy that has been present there from many years now. Without the Ganga River, we cannot even imagine our Bharat nation – the Ganga River is the ‘soul’ itself of the ‘country Bharat’. If we say this, it will not be an exaggeration. There is a belief that our sins get washed away in the Ganga River, and this really happens. To see whether this actually happens, ‘research’ has been done by bathing in the river for three consecutive days. If you bathe thrice in the Ganga River with faith and complete feeling, your sins do not get washed away, but the ‘memories’ of your sins get washed. It is a rule of nature, that if you have sinned, then you definitely have to endure its consequences. The memories of the sins that man has committed keep on worrying him more, and he keeps feeling ‘guilty’ that - I have sinned and I am a sinner. By bathing in the Ganga River this inferiority complex ends.

I am telling you about the ‘positive effect’ that took place on the chakras in my body, after bathing thrice in the Ganga River with complete feeling; I am telling you this based on the experience that I obtained. ‘Paramatma’ is an omnipresent power of consciousness, which is present in every human being. The water of the Ganga River is as holy and pure as the Ganga River. Even if you carry some of it in a pot or even in a bottle, it still remains pure. Similarly, even though a small portion of Paramatma is present within us, Paramatma's innate form is also just as powerful inside us, as Paramatma's innate form is outside. Meaning, that the divine energy within a man is like the Ganga water in the pot; and the Ganga water kept in the bottle is like the divine energy in a woman. The form and shape of a man and a woman may be different, but the Paramatma within both of them is the same.

Lots of blessings to all of you on the occasion of Mahakumbh.
